SECURITY: A French U.N. peacekeeper stands next to an armored vehicle before allowing it to enter the Skenderija U.N. base in Sarajevo on Tuesday. Serbs sent buses to the Bosnian border Tuesday as they prepared to release dozens more U.N. hostages following diplomatic bargaining between Bosnian Serb leaders and Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic.

Buses sent to Bosnian border; Serbs prepare hostage release

Associated Press

ZVORNIK, Yugoslavia — Bosnian Serbs sent buses to the border Tuesday, apparently preparing to release dozens more peacekeepers held by the Bosnian government. The West valued U.N. peacekeepers more than those of its own citizens.

The news agency BETA quoted an unnamed high-ranking Bosnian Serb as saying they had received assurances from NATO that there would be no more air raids — a key condition the West has refused to consider to date. There was no independent confirmation.

In London, Bosnia's foreign minister, Muhamed Sacirbey, complained Tuesday that Western governments were more concerned about the peacekeepers than the civilians who have been under Serb siege for more than three years.

"We do take exception to the priority that is being placed on the lives of our citizens — which seems to be lower as compared to the lives of the U.N. personnel including the U.N. hostages," said Sacirbey, the former Bosnian ambassador to the United Nations.

He became foreign minister June 1 after his predecessor, Irfan Ljubijankic, was killed when Bosnian Serbs shot down his plane.

Fighting continued Tuesday amid the diplomatic maneuvering. Two civilians were killed and one wounded when five shells hit the northwestern Bosnian city of Bihac, a U.N. declared "safe area."

There was also fighting near the eastern Muslim enclave of Gorazde, and two people were wounded by sniper fire in Sarajevo.

Meanwhile, about 1,500 U.S. troops and attack helicopters were preparing to move from Germany to Italy, and world leaders debated the role of a rapid deployment force of up to 10,000 troops being assembled by Britain and France.

The U.S. troops and some 50 Apache and Blackhawk helicopters will train in Italy to ensure "they are on the razor's edge of readiness," said U.S. Army-Europe spokesman Col. Richard Bridges in Heidelberg, Germany. The units being deployed can help withdraw or reposition U.N. peacekeepers in Bosnia.

Russia, which could veto any U.N. Security Council resolution on the rapid action force, expressed hope that it would not be a NATO operation. Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev said he was "reassured" after meeting British Foreign Secretary Douglas Hurd that it would be under U.N. command.

Any rift between Russia and Western powers could undermine delicate peace efforts in the region.

evening, Democrats had cut theirs to 15 to 20 and Republicans were down to five," said Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., the Senate Judiciary Committee's senior Democrat.

Family members of those killed in the bombing, meanwhile, gathered outside the Capitol and urged the senators to enact legislation to speed implementation of the death penalty.

As the Senate resumed work on the anti-terrorism measure after its week-long recess, it voted, 90-0, to approve a Democratic amendment requiring that tiny traceable materials, called taggants, be placed in chemicals that can be used to make bombs. The taggants would help law enforcement track down those responsible for bombings.

Republicans, Clinton reach agreement

Senate anti-terrorism bill progresses

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton has reversed himself and now accepts the Republican goal of including limits on death row appeals in anti-terrorism legislation moving toward a Senate vote.

Propelled by the Oklahoma City bombing, the Senate is moving toward a final vote on the legislation now that Clinton and Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole have quit blaming each other for delaying it.

Clinton and Dole prodded lawmakers Monday, spurring them to break the logjam. Republicans have pushed for a crackdown on death row appeals, while on another front, Democrats have sought expanded authority for electronic surveillance by law enforcement.

As recently as May 25, Clinton told Dole he did not want to address limits on death row appeals in the anti-terrorism bill. Monday night he said in a CNN interview on Larry King that it should be included in the bill "so that it would apply to any prosecutions brought against anyone indicted in Oklahoma."

At the White House Tuesday, deputy press secretary Mary Ellen Glynn said, "The dynamic has changed."

"President Clinton has always supported habeas corpus reform (limits on death row appeals) whether in the context of the anti-terrorism bill or not," Glynn said. "His paramount concern is that the anti-terrorism legislation be passed as soon as possible. And so therefore, if it contains habeas corpus reform and that doesn't slow the legislation down, so be it."

Dole, on the Senate floor Tuesday, said, "It's great news that President Clinton has apparently switched his position." The change should speed a final vote on the legislation, he said.

Dole, who is seeking the GOP presidential nomination, said Sunday that the bill might be bogged down by 67 Democratic amendments and 30 Republican amendments. By Monday

Drug bust exposes dirty lawyers, officials

Associated Press

MIAMI — The government's biggest legal assault on the Colombian cartel that provides this country with most of its cocaine included the indictment of a former Justice Department lawyer who once led efforts to extradite the Cali drug smugglers.

Authorities also accused 61 others Monday, including a former federal prosecutor. Three other lawyers, including a second federal prosecutor, have pleaded guilty to reduced charges. The indictment gives the most detailed view yet of the deadly Cali cartel, which is responsible for 80 percent of the cocaine circulating in this country, federal officials said.

The 44-month investigation, dubbed Operation Cornerstone, is "the single most significant prosecution in history against the Cali cartel," said U.S. Attorney Kendall Coffey of Miami.

"Now we have a better appreciation of their mechanisms, the steps they take to protect the cartel, the support network, the legitimate businesses that are the fronts," said Customs Commissioner George Weise.

About a third of the people named in the indictment are in the United States. Federal officials said 22 had been arrested by Monday. The charges against the former Justice Department lawyers stemmed from their activities after they left the department, authorities said.

"These lawyers defended clients charged with drug crimes," said Abbell's attorney, Roy Black. "They did all the things lawyers are supposed to do and now they're charged."

But federal officials said the lawyers encouraged potential witnesses to keep silent, provided drug money to the families of cartel associates in jail and fabricated false evidence that could be used to obstruct prosecution and forfeiture hearings here and overseas.

of the strongest areas of Salt Lake City's bid to host the 2002 Winter Games is its existing infrastructure.

The Salt Lake City be selected to host the Winter Games, eight out of its nine venues have either been constructed or are under construction and are scheduled to be completed soon.

The International Olympic Committee Evaluation Commission and the "overall sports concept" is an excellent one."

Now it's our mission in life to bid, but, in the worst case scenario, Salt Lake City will become the headquarters for Winter Olympic games in North America with our existing infrastructure," said Dr. Horologos, director of public works.

The Delta Center, which was built in 1991 as a multipurpose arena for sporting and entertainment, is fully programmed and operated for figure skating and men's ice hockey competition would be played there.

The IOC describe the Delta Center as an "excellent facility," which would require "some modifications which would reduce current spectator capacity."

The Ogden/Weber Ice Arena was opened in 1993 and would be the site of the women's ice hockey competition.

The Salt Lake Ice Arena would host additional ice hockey competitions and short-track speed skating.

This facility has not been constructed, but a proposed location is near the Olympic Village near the University of Utah campus.

The Oquirrh Park Oval is undergoing construction and will open in the fall.

The oval is an international-size ice sheet and will house two ice sheets in the oval's center.

The Cottonwood Heights Ice Arena would host one of the Winter Olympics newest sports, curling.

The facility was constructed in 1967 and has a seating capacity for 2,000 people.

The remaining four venues are located in the mountains surrounding Salt Lake City.

"The alpine skiing courses, with the exception of the downhill, already exist. They are homologated and, with the exception of the Super G, regularly used for World Cup races," the IOC said.

Mountain Dell Park would host the biathlon, cross-country and Nordic Combined skiing events.

The park has been the site of the World Cup Cross-Country competition, a Biathlon Race Series-Far West and the International Prestone Cross-country Sprint Race during previous years.

The bobsled, luge, ski jump and nordic combined ski jump competition would be held at the Winter Sports Park.

Survey indicates Winter Olympics will boost status of Church, Utah

By ALLYSON SHROCK

The Winter Olympics will provide exposure for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and expand missionary work in the year 2002, said Church officials and BYU students in an informal survey on the influences the Olympics will have on the Church.

Bruce Van Orden, associate professor of Church History, said President Gordon B. Hinckley spoke recently at a leadership meeting in Springville regarding the Olympics coming to Utah.

According to Van Orden, President Hinckley said the Church has taken a neutral stance on the Olympics. However, if it comes to Utah, Church officials should take advantage of it.

Don LeFevre, of the Public Affairs Department of the Church, said the Church has not spent much time considering ways and means it could be involved if the Olympics were to come to Utah. However, said LeFevre, the Church will cooperate in appropriate ways in making visitors feel welcome.

"I think it will be great because the entire world will know that the Olympics are in Utah," said Kelly Coons, a senior majoring in family sciences from Las Vegas, Nev.

Coons also feels the Olympics will emphasize the fact that the Church is growing — not only will the missionaries be talking about it but the entire world will.

President Robert C. Witt, president of the Temple Square Mission, said Temple Square is the most visited sight in Utah and one of the most visited sights in the United States.

Normally, Witt said, most of the visitors come during the summer months. However, if the Olympics come to Utah, the facilities and resources at Temple Square will easily be able to handle the large number of people who may come to see the Olympics.

Tourists will also be able to see the lifestyle of members of the Church and the beauty of Utah, said Van Orden. Temple Square and various other sites will be highlighted on a daily basis.

Van Orden also feels this will be a great opportunity for Utah to

2 killed, 24 injured in tug-of-war accident

FRANKFURT, Germany — Two Boy Scouts died after a rope snapped during a giant tug-of-war by 650 people who were trying to win a place in the Guinness Book of Records, prosecutors said Tuesday.

The thumb-thick nylon rope broke and whipped back during the contest Sunday. A 9-year-old boy died at the scene and at least 24 other people were injured, five of them seriously. One of the injured, a 10-year-old boy from Koblenz, died Tuesday.

The tug-of-war was being held during a Boy Scout outing at Westernhohe, near Koblenz in western Germany.

Prosecutor Norbert Weise said his office was investigating to determine whether the organizers should be prosecuted for negligence. The nylon rope was not designed to withstand the force of being pulled by 650 people, Weise said.

Malcolm X's daughter charged in forgery

COALVILLE — Malikah Shabazz, the 29-year-old daughter of the late black activist Malcolm X, will be in court later this month to answer charges that she went on a shopping spree with a stolen credit card.

Shabazz has pleaded innocent to 20 counts of forgery, theft, unlawful use of a credit card and giving false information to an officer. Her attorney said the charges are the result of a misunderstanding.

Shabazz, who has been living in Provo, is to appear June 27 in 3rd Circuit Court in Summit County, for a preliminary hearing to determine whether there is enough evidence to warrant a trial.

The alleged crime spree occurred at a factory outlet mall in Park City on May 22, but was first publicized on Tuesday in the Deseret News.

She is the sister of Qubilah Shabazz, who struck a plea agreement with federal prosecutors in Minnesota last month after being accused of conspiring to kill Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

Malikah Shabazz's court-appointed attorney, Glen Cook, said even the alleged victim, Shabazz's landlord, believed the use of the card was a misunderstanding.

Simpson jury prepares for gruesome photos

LOS ANGELES — Two black women, one of whom saw her father beat her mother, were added to the O.J. Simpson jury Tuesday to replace a black man and a Hispanic woman ousted by the judge.

The move shifted the racial balance on the jury to nine blacks, two whites and one Hispanic. There are now 10 women and two men. The alternate pool, which started at 12, has just two members left, one man and one woman.

The trial entered its most gruesome phase as county Coroner Lakshmanan Sathiyavagiswaran started discussing the handling of the bodies of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman, showing the jurors envelopes in which such items as hair and eyelash samples are kept.

So jurors could see what photos from his office looked like, they saw a photo of Nicole Brown Simpson's fingernails.

Also Tuesday, attorneys argued about whether the news media should see graphic crime scene and autopsy photographs. Judge Lance Ito said he would "think about it." Attorneys for both sides opposed the media request.

Weber County celebrates right to bear arms

OGDEN — The Weber County Commission says it supports the U.S. Constitution's Second Amendment. Well, at least most of it.

In declaring "Right to Keep and Bear Arms Week" this week, commissioners Spencer Stokes and Joe Ritchie refused to include the portion of the amendment's wording concerning establishment of militias.

That move angered Dale Hartog, who wanted the proclamation endorsed by the commissioners in recognition of Saturday's Friends Of The National Rifle Association banquet in Ogden.

"What else are they going to pick and choose to support?" he said. "They're doing that for political expediency."

Stokes and Ritchie worried that their constituents might interpret the proclamation as support for the militia movement.

The Second Amendment reads: "A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed."

"The Olympics will provide exposure for the Church to an international community," said Joseph McConkie, professor of Ancient Scripture. McConkie said it will be wonderful exposure for the state of Utah and the LDS people through the use of the media.

The Olympics will also show the LDS people in a good light, said Van Orden. From the viewpoint of a professor of the history of the International Church, Van Orden said it is something that is really needed right now.

South African high court abolishes death penalty

Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa — The country's highest court of one of the most violent countries abolished the death penalty Tuesday, ruling that life outweighed setting an example to deter crime.

Work Row at the Pretoria prison, the 453 inmates sent a burst into cheers and they heard the unanimous decision of the 11-member Constitutional Court, prison officials said.

"After years, I'm praying to see my day it was glory," said a woman from Soweto, whose son was seen on Death Row since 1989.

The capital punishment debate has intensified since the 1994 vote that brought the ANC to power and made Mandela the nation's first black president.

Death penalty advocates say the halt in executions has contributed to an explosion of violence. South Africa topped 20,000 killings in 1993 and now routinely tallies 17,000 to 18,000 homicides per year, making it one of the planet's most murderous countries.

penalty.

It was de Klerk, as president in 1990, who suspended executions as part of an initiative to begin negotiations with the African National Congress. South Africa's last hanging was in 1989, but killers have continued to be sentenced to death.

The office of President Nelson Mandela, who himself narrowly escaped execution when he was sentenced to life in prison for trying to overthrow the government in 1963, called the court's deliberations "sober and humane."

Mandela's ANC, which considered the dozens of hangings a year carried out by the old white regime as a tool of repression against blacks, was exultant.

"Never, never and never again must citizens of our country be subjected to the barbaric practice of capital punishment," it said.

in 1993 and now routinely tallies 17,000 to 18,000 homicides per year, making it one of the planet's most murderous countries. The per capita rate is seven to eight times that of the United States. The ruling was the first major decision by the court set up in February to interpret South Africa's first constitution to guarantee equal rights.

South Africa became the 55th country to abolish capital punishment, while 15 allow it only for exceptional crimes such as war crimes. In addition, 27 countries and territories allow executions but never carry them out.

Illegitimacy rates on the rise

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Murphy Brown wasn't the only older woman having a baby out of wedlock in recent years. The birth rate for unmarried women has surged since 1980, with the rate for white women nearly doubling, the government reported.

Teen-agers, who once accounted for half the unwed births, bore fewer than a third of these 1.2 million babies in 1992, the National Center for Health Statistics said Tuesday.

When the fictitious Brown, the glamorous anchorwoman on a television situation comedy, had a child out of wedlock three seasons ago, then-Vice President Dan Quayle accused the show of glamorizing illegitimacy and undermining values.

Career woman who elect to have a baby without a husband are still relatively rare.

More often, unwed mothers are single women in their late teens or early 20s with lower incomes and less education than other mothers, said Stephanie Ventura, a government demographer who prepared the report.

"Childbearing by these women is not really a Murphy Brown situation," said Ventura.

The rising out-of-wedlock birth rates point to "a tremendous decline in the stigma" that society once attached to such births, said Ventura.

Schools that once expelled pregnant girls and sent them off to homes for unwed mothers now have day-care programs for the students' offspring, she noted.

The out-of-wedlock birth rates rose sharply for women 20 and older.

The highest rates were among women ages 20-24 (68.5 births per 1,000), followed by women ages 18-19 (67.3) and women 25-29 (56.5). The rate for women ages 30-34 was 37.9 and for teen-agers 15-17 it was 30.4.

The National Center for Health Statistics said the unmarried birth rate rose 54 percent from 1980 to 1992. There were 29.4 births per 1,000 unmarried women aged 15-44 in 1980, and 45.2 births per 1,000 in both 1991 and 1992.

Free State Park Day to lure new fishermen

THE WRIGHT

and reverse Staff Writer

Utah's all state parks and recreation will be free to the public.

Access to the 45 state parks and recreation areas will be free to the public and no fishing license is required to use the many recreation venues near Provo.

State Park Day is our way of encouraging regular visitors for their support, while encouraging those who may have never visited a park, to come see what it has to offer," said Courtland, director of the Utah Division of State Parks and Recreation, in a press release.

Entrance does not include camping or use of the three state parks run by the division of State Parks and Recreation.

The $18 fishing license fee also opens the way for new anglers to get hooked on a recreational hobby, said Scott, regional information manager for the Utah Division of Wildlife Resources.

Fishing is a great hobby, especially because it keeps them off the couch and can even feed them,"

Younger people to fishing is a major focus of the division of State Parks and Recreation, and a main reason for the fishing day.

The "Pathways to Fishing" program is an annual on free fishing day where shown the proper technique for fishing and allowed to try their skills in a stocked pond, the program targets inner-city youth, though all youth are one mile above Bridal Veil Falls — can use bait, while fishing above the dam requires flies or lures.

Shaun Carter, an owner of Great Basin Fly and Outfitters, has enjoyed fly-fishing on the Provo River.

"Up till now the river has been really low but I have still had really good success," Carter said.

The river should fill and remain quite high, Root said. Fish are expected to congregate in pools along the shallower banks, because it takes less energy for them to stay stationary.

Carter has also had success fly-fishing at Strawberry Reservoir. While fishing the Indian Creek area of the reservoir recently, he caught a 24-inch cut-throat.

Fishing from the shore is traditionally slow at Strawberry, though fishermen have been commonly known to catch two-pound fish. Float tubes or trolling boats are recommended.

Other reservoirs stocked by the wildlife division:

- Deer Creek — has been yielding more fish than usual this year, especially shore fishing
- Tibble Fork and Silver Flat — located up American Fork Canyon
- Spring Lake — south of Payson
- Salem Pond — off highway 6 in the center of Salem

A proclamation listing the limits and rules for free fishing day should be obtained before venturing out to play "A River Runs Through it." They can be picked up at any sporting goods store or Smith's.

LEISURE TIME: Anglers fly fish on the Provo River near Vivian Park in April 1995. Regular park attendees and fishing enthusiasts will be treated to a free fishing day from the Utah Division of State Parks and Recreation as a way to thank them for their patronage and support. Park entrance fees will be waived and fishing will not require the $15 license on Saturday. The day is also to attract newcomers to the pastime, specifically inner city children.

Home-schooling convention caters to all parents

ANDREA HOSAC

and reverse Staff Writer

Young University will host the annual Utah Home Schooling Association Convention and Film Fair.

The conference, which will be held at the University of Utah, is expected to attract a large number of participants in home education, including those who are just investigating their options.

"Probably 30 or 40 percent of this year's workshops are for first-year people," said Shauna Peatross, convention chairwoman. "But the convention is for everybody. Really it's just about education. You don't have to be planning on home schooling your children."

Peatross focuses on the fact that home schoolers are parents who are interested and involved with their children's education.

Home schooling has become a national trend. The U.S. Department of Education estimated over half a million home-schooled children in 1993. According to the Utah Home Education Association, 6,000 Utah families are educating 25,000 children at home. This number is growing at about 30 percent annually.

Saturday UVSC classes available to local students

ANDREA HOSAC

and reverse Staff Writer

Students are required to work while in college, making it difficult to fit classes into their schedules. To accommodate their schedules, Utah State College now offers courses on Saturday.

The college has arranged many general classes to fit into a weekend schedule instead of interfering with full-time work schedules.

Saturday courses will include business, computer science, physical education, mathematics, humanities and philosophy. Some of these classes fulfill general education and the requirements for students.

Young works full-time and is enrolled in a UVSC course offered on Saturday.

"It has been difficult to schedule all of my classes while keeping a full-time work schedule," Young said. "This (Saturday class) has allowed me to take the remaining classes I need to finish this year." Young's Saturday class will enable her to graduate with a bachelor's degree this December.

BYU has scheduled Saturday classes in the past but has found that it disrupts student and faculty schedules because it is often difficult to attend classes scheduled on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, said Ron Bybee, scheduling officer.

However, departments cannot schedule classes on Saturday. The request would go through the department and then be decided by the University Curriculum Committee.

Bob Dole neglected to mention who butters Hollywood's bread

In need of brownie points and an endorsement from the religious, conservative right, Senate Majority leader and presidential hopeful Bob Dole took a shot at the Hollywood establishment last week. His admonitions to the entertainment industry to clean up or shut up may sound good politically, but they left a lot to be desired.

Since Dan Quayle's anti-Murphy Brown rantings, Hollywood has become Washington's favorite whipping boy. Democrats and Republicans alike cry for entertainment sanitation while Hollywood's elite hide behind the First Amendment. As usual, the debate becomes a stalemate.

Not to say that Hollywood is the next City of Enoch, or that entertainment moguls are candidates for canonization, but politicians trying to make points by slamming Sin City are missing a major point — who is paying for this filth to be made?

The answer — the American people.

Why hasn't Sen. Dole, Janet Reno, Tipper Gore, or Newt Gingrich rebuked the American people who have paid for Hollywood's excesses through buying movie tickets, purchasing CD's or turning on the tube? Hollywood is, more or less, a business which operates through profits. Films like "Die Hard with a Vengeance," "True Lies," or "Terminator 2: Judgement Day" are produced because studio executives know they will be box office phenomenons. That they are also mayhem festivals tells Hollywood that gore is, well, fun.

Politicians who accuse Hollywood for all of society's ills have been forgetting who butters Hollywood's bread. American people, whether in Hollywood, New York, or Salt Lake City or Provo pay Hollywood's bills by consuming their product. Two weeks ago, the number one movie nationwide was "Die Hard with a Vengeance." This was also the number one film right here on the Wasatch Front. If the public is so fed up with the entertainment industry's garbage, the solution is alarmingly simple — don't buy it.

Dole's choice of films to crucify also raised some questions. Oliver Stone's "Natural Born Killers," Tony Scott's "True Romance" and Clive Barkers "Hellraiser" were among the films on Dole's hit list. Interestingly enough, all three of these films' box office performances were disappointing at best, meaning hardly any of the public took much notice. Dole conveniently omitted mention of Hollywood's leading king of mayhem, Arnold Schwarzenegger, whose cinematic achievements include such bloodfests as "Total Recall" and "Terminator 2: Judgement Day." Could the fact that Schwarzenegger is an active Republican have anything to do with it?

Maybe one reason that violence is so prevalent in our entertainment is because the consumers have demonstrated that they like it and filmmakers love providing it. Sex has become sensationalized because the American people have said they don't want any realistic discussion of it. One prominent film critic recently wrote that a common statement he hears from moviegoers is "I don't care too much about the violence. I just don't want to see any sex."

Hollywood's entertainers do not stand guiltless in this debate. Violence and sex are popular subjects because they easily generate reactions without a lot of imagination. However, Hollywood certainly is capable of producing excellent, uplifting entertainment. Maybe they would more often, if the public would quit demanding "Dumb and Dumber."

Interior decorating skills humble newlywed husband

Interior design can be a slippery situation for men. I used to think that in the department of domestic decor, my footing was sure. But now that I'm married, the situation is clear — I'm flat on the ground — looking up at my wife.

A comparison is the best way to clarify my position. If I were going to group therapy, my confession would go like this: I'm a male and I can't decorate the interior of a home.

There, I did it. Somewhat traumatic, but that's what my experience has been.

Here's my story. We moved into this dumpy apartment after we got married and I decided to display my taste for design.

"Let's put the picture here," I said. "No," she said, and looked away.

"That's clear," I thought. Undaunted, I tried again, but without giving her a chance to confirm my palate for decor. I grabbed the southwest rug we received as a wedding gift.

"I think the southwest rug we got for our wedding would look just fine in the kitchen," I said, placing it strategically in our hallway kitchenette.

"No," came the reply. Again, she was forthright — a personality trait I used to appreciate. "That rug doesn't go with the color of our oven."

Silly me, our yellow oven didn't match with the rug. Why didn't the people who gave us the rug ask about the color of our oven?

To my surprise, the color of the oven was not yellow. It was mustard, you know, the name of a condiment that doubles as a color.

At least this time Kate gave me an alternative to my mismatching of colors.

"The color of our oven will match a sunflower theme in the kitchen," she said.

"No, no, no! You can't choose sunflowers over this tough, Apache slash cowboy rug!"

With timely deliberation, I chose not to voice these thoughts.

Instead, I said, "Sunflowers will be perfect." Good answer Cove.

Since the sunflower incident, Katherine has seen my decor input only once. Before going off to National Guard duty for two weeks in the summer, I rearranged the books on top of our entertainment center. I put my Louis L'Amour books up front and many of our unused books in back of the cowboy novels, a practical move of which I was sure she would approve.

Two weeks later, when I got back from Guard duty, my Louis L'Amour books found a new home. Yep, you guessed it. My classic cowboy novels of salty characters and heroic gunfights were moved upstairs on the bottom book shelf, replaced downstairs by hardcover books that look "cute."

Kate said nothing about correcting my attempt to change our entertainment center. I figured I had been pushed down for the last time.

Needless to say, I don't decorate.

Thanks to volunteers

To the Editor:

The Utah Special Olympics 1995 Summer Games happened at BYU last weekend. Athletes from across Utah competed in six sports. More than 1,200 athletes and 1,500 volunteers were involved.

Because of the outstanding staff and facilities at BYU, the games came off with very few problems, which is amazing considering the weather. We moved track and field events back and forth from the indoor track at the Smith Fieldhouse to the outdoor track. A representative from Special Olympics International commented, "No Special Olympics Chapter can rival what was accomplished here this year. Our ability to overcome the weather was unmatched."

BYUSA's outstanding volunteer core, led by Carlyn Jarvis, had a great deal to do with the successes that our athletes experienced. Her volunteers continually "weathered" the storm, shifting from venue to venue, transporting athletes, changing meal plans and moving various entertainment acts from site to site. Thus, BYU and BYUSA volunteers deserve a gold medal this week as much as any athlete.

Volunteers are vital to the success of Special Olympics. As Director of Utah Special Olympics, I continually tell leaders of major companies how spoiled I am being able to supervise volunteers. With the labor issues going on in business today, it is refreshing to see volunteers work. I can place the CEO of a company side-by-side with a person who has a tough time holding down a job and, without question, they work as a team to accomplish the task at hand.

The reward a volunteer receives by helping this great cause was summarized by one volunteer's comment to me during the games. Working all night, shivering, dripping wet, standing in the rain, he turned to me and asked if he could do this again next year.

The faculty and staff of BYU should be proud of their students. If a few of their students seem to be a little tired or under the weather this week, just remember, they weathered the storm to help those who truly need their help.

On behalf of the athletes and staff of Utah Special Olympics, our congratulations and thanks to all who helped. The athletes and volunteers of Utah Special Olympics are all winners.

NRA guards our liberty

To the Editor:

Perhaps the only assuring feature of Margreta Sundelin's English 115 paper, published on the editorial page of the May 31st issue of The Universe, was that it appeared as a guest column and not as a permanent column. In short, I was astonished by her lack of understanding for the Constitution of the United States of America, as well as for the National Rifle Association, given her outspoken stance on the topic.

Toward the finale of Ms. Sundelin's pastoral, she exhorted the reader "to exert the authority which the Founding Fathers gave us." I agree. Quoting American statesman and Founding Father to the Constitution, Alexander Hamilton in The Federalist, No.28, "if the representatives of the people betray their constituents, there is then no recourse left but in the exertion of that original right of self-defense which is paramount to all positive forms of government."

The Bill of Rights was a direct response to the popular demand in post-colonial America for a written declaration of individual freedoms. These liberties included not only freedoms of expression, but also ensured protections from governmental oppression. The right to keep and bear arms gained constitutional recognition largely due to the abuses of power that led to the American Revolution. Furthermore, America's independence was attainable largely because the colonists owned and were skilled in the use of firearms.

The Second Amendment states, "A well-regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms, shall not be infringed." Random House defines a militia as "a body of citizen soldiers as distinguished from professional soldiers." The courts have long recognized the right to bear arms as a fundamental guarantor of the liberty of the United States. In Fife v. State [31 Arkansas 455 (1876)], the justices found that "The arms which it guarantees American citizens the right to bear, are such as are needful to, and ordinarily used by a well-regulated militia, and such as are necessary and suitable to a free people, to enable them to resist oppression, prevent usurpation, rebel invasion, etc., etc."

While the author of the column thoughtlessly decided that the Oklahoma City bombing incident was just cause for curtailing our constitutional rights, the justices in Wilson v. State [33 Arkansas 557 (1878)] emphasized that "if cowardly and dishonorable men sometimes shoot unarmed men with army pistols and guns, the evil must be prevented by the penitentiary and gallows, and not by a general deprivation of a constitutional privilege." The column contained a narrow assertion that the NRA was somehow responsible for the bombing. Timothy McVeigh was trained by the United States Armed Forces, not by the National Rifle Association.

Instead of taking direct measures to combat crime, the Clinton Administration has continually pursued facade measures to deceive the American people into believing that it is tough on crime. The Assault Weapons Ban was the center piece of President Clinton's 1994 anti-crime legislation, despite the fact that those particular weapons have been involved in less than one percent of crimes committed across the United States.

In fact, few Americans realize that the Assault Weapons Ban did not actually ban the weapons themselves. It merely stipulated that specific semi-assault weapons (AR-15, SKS, Dragunov, AKM, etc.) comply with the following: no bayonet mounts, no flash suppressors, no pistol grips, and no magazines over ten rounds. The reality is that the Assault Weapons Ban created nothing but cosmetic inconvenience and broad deception. The illusion is that America is now a safer place, thanks to President Clinton and the 1994 Democratic Congress. The American public can now rest assured that there will be no more mass murders a la bayonet.

The NRA's primary focus is to preserve the full meaning of the Second Amendment, as intended by the framers of the constitution. The NRA also has begun to place increasing attention on abuses by federal law enforcement agencies, namely the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms. While Ms.

Sundelin regards this attention as rhetoric," hopefully, she would no longer condemn the of Rodney King as such. Ms. Sundelin spoke of "eternal" moral obligations. Our obligation defend the Constitution of the United States so that our great nation can continue to be a great nation.

Trade war is child

To the Editor:

We've all seen it. Two three-year-olds in a fight and go running off to the whining that the other child isn't playing. They shout threats such as, "My dad's going to beat up your daddy." No really tell who is right and, frankly, cares. The parents and the neighbor want the racket to stop.

If applied to the world stage, these are Bill Clinton and Mickey Kantor with Japan and their Ministry of International Trade and Industry. Are the Japanese really gripe that Americans are "stealing" their market with the 100 percent luxury tax on cars? Or are Clinton and Kantor right in saying "they hit us first" with government subsidies, tariffs and a cartel-dominated market?

Personally, I feel they way the world should do it doesn't matter who is right, they should just kiss and make up.

Basically, tariffs slow the economic growth. The most efficient way to get and grow isn't by trying to dance around other countries' markets, but through trading with them instead. The world has been an international market and China, Japanese and American, must stay in the game that way. The American market cannot build a second rate car and sell as well. At the same time, the market cannot sit back with their over-inflated economy assuming that their economy is strong and improve by disregarding foreign competition, selling only domestic products.

Any country that wants to rule the world market can't hide behind government interference and regulation. That instead must be bold, courageous and to take the system by storm, and it's this by playing fairly.

If the United States and Japan want to act without pillow fights of tariffs and both countries would grow stronger result of the friendly competition. That for the consumer's loyalty, better goods have to be made and prices would be dropped. As a result, technology would, quality would go up and business expand.

This would improve the economies of nations in two ways. First, the market would be willing to buy more, thus more money into the economy. Second, expansion of business would create jobs. In both America and Japan, domestic plants as well as more domestic plants would be placed in the short-termism may protect a few domestic jobs but it is competition that will truly improve the economy.

Neither Japan or the United States are to be blamed individually. Instead, it is the competition on both sides that is slowing the world economy. Who hit who first doesn't matter. Instead, both countries need to down and realize the benefits of competition rather than bickering.

The dilemma: say it's art, or P.E.

Completing another self-study, members of the Dance Department have informally dis- sisting to the College of Fine Arts. Many concerns exist about space, financial resources and the use of ballroom and folk

Some who would like to see the possibility (of moving to fine arts) investigated," said Robert Allen, dean of the College of Education.

The department has not officially decided the move, said Cathy Debenham, associate professor in the department.

Allen's self-study was more extensive and intense than ever. Members were asked to think about goals, strengths and weaknesses. Debbie Peterson, secretary and academic vice president, is in the Department of Dance. Self-study seriously.

The primary thing is asking, "What is the function or role of dance?" The purpose for this thing to do is that's a very personal and subjective issue," said Pat Debenham, department faculty member.

The Dance Department can only offer bachelor and master degrees in physical education, she said. However, a masters of fine arts is offered to students if the department were to move to the College of Fine Arts. This has caused

Interested dance students to go to other universities, said Sandra Allen, administrator for ballet. The transfer of fine arts is a terminal degree equivalent to a doctorate

TO STAY, OR NOT TO STAY: The Theater Ballet Company previewed its spring tour in February, which featured jazz, modern and classical ballet styles. BYU's Dance Department is facing the question of whether it should stay in the College of Physical Education, or move to the College of Fine Arts. The department cannot offer students a master of fine arts degree, which has caused many students to transfer to other universities. This could be offered through the College of Fine Arts.

and is greatly preferred over a masters of art by employers, Black said.

The public may look down on dance at BYU because of its placement in physical education, Allen said.

"We have a certain degree of autonomy, self-evident by the quality of our performing groups," Allen said. "The fine arts quality we have, but maybe the label we have doesn't convey it as well as a fine arts label would."

Moving to fine arts may improve dance at BYU, said Mark Lanham, co-director of theater ballet.

"We should be rubbing shoulders with musicians and actors. Having ballet in physical education is like having English in the Art Department because you draw letters," he said.

But folk and ballroom wouldn't be as accepted in the Fine Arts Department, said Suzanne Davis, Folk Dance Division administrator.

"In fine arts, the dance disciplines we are integrating might not be viewed as such," she said. "Folk and ballroom have their own art form, but would not be placed in the performance genre."

But the same facilities may not be available if moved, and the College of Fine Arts might not have enough resources for dance, Lanham said.

"Everybody raves about the de Jong Concert Hall, but it has no dressing room; there's no studio space. The floor is hard, and we had to buy a floor so we could dance on it," he said. The lack of space causes problems now, Davis said.

"We (the folk dance team) go all over the world performing for kings and queens, but at BYU we have to compete with Marriott Center events.

The College of Fine Arts is already facing a shortage of performing space," she said.

The department could overcome the space problem, Debenham said.

"I can't imagine that the University would be so shortsighted to make these facilities unavailable to us if we moved to fine arts. The same is true for the financial resources," he said.

The College of Physical Education offers more support in how to use the body properly than the College of Fine Arts could, said many faculty members in the Dance Department.

"Within our department, there's a sense of 'If it ain't broke, don't try to fix it,'" Debenham said. "It's a philosophical question of what we are most aligned with. Dance is a very important physical education, and it's also a fine art."

Students, faculty debate where dance belongs

By JOY HIATT
Universe Staff Writer

Faculty members in the College of Fine Arts and students in the Department of Dance have mixed feelings about where the Dance Department belongs.

BYU's Department of Dance is part of the College of Physical Education, although some faculty and students feel it belongs in the College of Fine Arts.

Clyn Barrus, chair of the Music Department, thinks that members of the dance faculty are some of the finest and most creative people on campus.

"There's no question that dance is one of the fine arts and is a means of artistic expression, one of the most beautiful and significant," he said.

Other faculty members in the College of Fine Arts, such as Charles Whitman, professor of theater and film, think some dance could be considered fine art, while other forms of dance may not be.

"Dance is a fine art, at least ballet and modern are," Whitman said.

Graduate students in dance have heard that they need a master of fine arts to keep their resumes on the desk, said Lisa Stoddard, a graduate student in dance from St. George.

"We would love it if the degree offered here was a master of fine arts," she said. "But it wouldn't matter where we're at, as long as we're dancing."

Other graduate students said they like the dance program as it is.

"I've been told by a dance professor that we get more money in the Department of Physical Education," said Julie Ahlander, a graduate student from Edmond, Okla., who is studying dance.

"If we move into the College of Fine Arts and got less money, that would be pretty bad," Ahlander said.

"I wouldn't care if we were housed in the math building, if we had quality faculty," said Karen Christensen, a graduate student from Sandy studying choreography performance.

"We have one of the best programs in the nation," Christensen said. "The faculty is well-qualified and has high credentials."

Other students taking a beginning folk dance course, have different views about dance as a fine art.

"If you're looking at how folk dance represents other cultures, it is a fine art," said Deborah Unitt, a junior from Fairborn, Ohio. "If you're talking about style and technical aspects, it's not."

"We would love it if the degree offered here was a master of fine arts, but it wouldn't matter where we're at, as long as we're dancing."

Anglican priest directs Mormon Studies Program

By ALESIA THOMPSON
Universe Staff Writer

Professor Douglas Davies, an ordained priest in the Church of England and the director of the Mormon Studies Program in the United Kingdom, the beginning of years of research about the life of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was was a student in anthropology at the University of Oxford when he asked one of his professors for ideas regarding a research topic. The professor of the LDS Church came up and Davies' professor told him to go and learn about it.

"I was an obedient kind of student, I went off and read up and meeting members of the LDS Church," Davies said. "It was as accidental as that." The Mormon Studies Program is a research-graduate program at the University of Nottingham that was established approximately six years ago.

Students in the program are studying contemporary issues of Mormonism, Davies said. Subjects that students are studying include the history of higher education on Mormon students' commitment to their faith, Mormon attitudes to music — especially the influence of popular music on young people and on their spirituality — and Mormon attitudes toward Mormon bishops, Davies said.

The program will have its first four graduates this summer. Most of the students are members of the LDS Church, Davies said, but he hopes to get students of all different faiths in the program.

The LDS Church in the United Kingdom has been very helpful in providing information for the Mormon Studies Program, Davies said.

"The Church supported us ... in terms of some books and that sort of thing for which we were very grateful," he said.

Davies would like to see more BYU students go over and participate in the Mormon Studies Program for a semester or for a post-graduate program. "I would be very pleased if anyone was interested," he said.

Davies has received degrees in anthropology and theology from the Universities of Durham and Oxford and has published a book entitled "Mormon Spirituality" — a historical book about the LDS religion. "It's a history-of-religions approach to the study of Mormonism," Davies said.

Davies has been studying the LDS religion for the past seven years. His first thesis, which was completed in 1971, was on the LDS Church in Great Britain and specifically in Wales.

He is at BYU in association with the Richard L. Evans professorship in religious understanding, which is a professorship put together to promote the understanding and learning of other religions, said David Paulsen, professor of philosophy and holder of the Richard L. Evans professorship.

Paulsen said that having Davies at BYU helps us better understand ourselves by giving us an outside perspective.

Davies is here doing research — specifically on legal and mystical authority in religion.

Having been to BYU only once before, Davies was impressed with the campus and Utah as a whole.

"It's beautiful. I hope that the students appreciate these wonderful mountains and the snow and the clouds," Davies said. "Every student on this campus should be a poet."

Mexican city featured in museum display

By SHANNON SMITH
Universe Staff Writer

The city of Paquime (pronounced pa-KEE-may), once located in Northern Mexico and destroyed sometime around 1400, can be revisited at the Museum of People and Cultures.

The museum is displaying an exhibit on Paquime and the Casas Grandes Culture. The exhibit was a collaborative effort.

Romney, a BYU graduate student and student co-curator, worked on the project under the direction of Dr. Allen and Joel C. Janetski.

Romney received a grant for the exhibit from the BYU Office of Research and Creative Work, which has funded three times by the muse-

Allen, the assistant director, said they planned on doing an exhibition."

Romney said that most of the pieces in the exhibit were donated to BYU from private individuals many years ago. The collection also has a few pieces on temporary loan from various private sources.

Amanda Thompson, who graduated in April with a degree in anthropology, works in the museum and acts as a guide. She said the exhibit shows the Chichimeca people. The display has examples of their architecture, trade items, craft technology, farming and religion.

The city of Paquime had multiple level buildings, Thompson said.

The people started building city complexes with many rooms much like our modern-day apartment complexes. They also had running canal systems.

The exhibit also features the aviculture that went on in Paquime. Aviculture is the raising of birds.

Romney said they have tried to gear the exhibit to all ages so everyone will enjoy it.

The museum's hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday. For more information call 378-6112.

CULTURE COMES ALIVE: The BYU Museum of People and Cultures is featuring a display on the Mexican city of Paquime. Part of the exhibit includes the pottery produced by the Paquime people.

Past, present BYU students aided by Alumni Association loans, card

By JOY HIATT
Universe Staff Writer

The BYU Alumni Association is providing various services to past and current BYU students, including loans, social activities, information on BYU performing groups and reunions, and use of several BYU facilities.

The association is also sending out lists of entering freshman to each regional chapter to promote activities with the new students, said Roy A. Brinkerhoff, assistant director of alumni activities.

The activities help freshman become familiar with people from BYU, said Stephen L. Barrett, director of alumni activities.

"They (the regional chapters) provide an activity for students who have been admitted to BYU and for students home for the summer, to get acquainted and maybe get rides back and forth," Barrett said.

Each regional chapter may offer loans to BYU students by raising money and giving it to students from its area, Barrett said.

"We don't send the football team to collect the (loan) money 10 years from now," Barrett said. "It is a moral commitment to pay back as soon as they can pay so that other students can receive funding."

The chapters help choose who receives the loan, Brinkerhoff said. A committee at the chapter takes applications and chooses a continuing student that meets criteria issued by the BYU scholarship office.

BYU alumni are entitled to both on- and off-campus privileges, said DyAnn P. Houston, alumni records manager.

If BYU alumni have an alumni card, they get a discount during seasonal BYU Bookstore sales around Thanksgiving, Christmas and April commencement, and they can buy tickets to BYU music and theater events for a lower price. Alumni can attend activities at the Wilkinson Center and use the library and physical education facilities with their free alumni card.

"They (alumni) just come up to our office and we give (the alumni card) to them. We do update their information and address," she said.

BYU graduates or former students that took at least 24 credit hours are members of the alumni association.

"They're automatically in the database and get the magazine for free," Houston said.

This publication, the Brigham Young Magazine, is published four times each year and contains articles about BYU. It also lets alumni know when and where reunions will be held, Houston said.

Each regional chapter of the alumni association holds activities, such as socials, tailgate parties and service projects, Barrett said. The association also runs an alumni placement program, matching alumni looking for jobs with prospective employers, he said.

For more information on alumni benefits, call the Alumni Records Office at 378-6740.

EVERYONE SAY 'ALUMNI': The new heads of the BYU Alumni Association were recently appointed in North Carolina. The association has several regional chapters that hold activities for both alumni and current BYU students. The chapters also raise money to provide loans for students. These loans are refunded on the student's own time, functioning on the idea that the loans are a moral commitment.

DON'T WORRY, BE HAPPY: Geoffrey J. Germane, a mechanical engineering professor, told students attending Tuesday's Devotional that true happiness is a product of faith. Patriarchal blessings are evidence of Heavenly Father's love for his children, Germane added. They provide guidance through the trials of life.

Ending the chaos of sin brings joy, says Germane

By CHRISTINE SCHROEDER
Universe Staff Writer

Geoffrey J. Germane, BYU professor of mechanical engineering, explained in Tuesday's Devotional that all of God's children are capable of having good cheer.

Good cheer means never losing hope, he said. It is an invitation to come unto Christ.

"True good cheer is born of faith and is not a state only reserved for prophets or babies," Germane said.

Germane gave three reasons for people to be of good cheer: inertia, entropy and Heavenly Father's love for all of his children.

Inertia is the tendency of matter to remain at rest, if at rest; or, if moving, to remain moving in the same direction.

Germane said there is opposition in all things and inertia can act as either an enemy or a friend, depending on which path is chosen.

"Through our force of effort, it is important to keep moving in the right direction," Germane said.

Entropy is a measure of the degree of disorder in a substance or system. Germane related entropy to repentance and how students can be of good cheer through repentance.

"Through repentance we undergo an irreversible process, and our old ways become obsolete," Germane said.

Germane said he is concerned about the welfare of BYU students, saying he understands the consequential decisions and future challenges they are facing and will continue to confront.

He said his heart-rending decision to join The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, despite pressures, doesn't compare to the difficult choices young people are faced with today.

Germane spoke of the importance of the weekly sacrament, which serves as a reminder of the atonement of Jesus Christ.

He said the reason students should remember the Lord is that the Lord first remembered them.

Germane assured the audience that the Lord continues watching over his children and will help them with their many trials.

"The Lord has come unto us, and maintains a close proximity," Germane said.

Germane said Heavenly Father's love for his children is made evident through patriarchal blessings. These blessings give guidance to members of the LDS Church and help them through the difficulties in their lives.

Students can obtain the Lord's will through patriarchal blessings, he said.

"He lives today as Lord, master and redeemer, and we have nothing to fear because God is at the helm," Germane said.

After having had that kind of exposure and insight, I knew my fiancé and I would be crazy to get our rings anywhere else.

After Jordan bought my ring from Alard & Losee, it became time for me to buy one for him. Alard & Losee offers $150 credit toward any groom's ring, saving me more money on a price that could not be beaten anywhere else.

Even though we've finished buying our rings, we love going back to the store. Every time we come through the door, they remember our names - first and last. Jordan and I like to think we're special to them. They sure make us feel like it!

Konrad Nelson

Principal Harpist, Utah Symphony Orchestra

Born in Washington, D.C. in 1960, Konrad Nelson grew up in Northern California and Utah. He began studying the harp in high school. After graduation in 1978, he pursued his studies at California Institute of the Arts under the direction of Catherine Gotthoffer. In 1980 he auditioned for, and was accepted to the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. In addition, Mr. Nelson won three consecutive private scholarships to study with legendary concert harpist Mildred Dilling at her University of California master class in Los Angeles. Mr. Nelson has performed extensively as recitalist and soloist with orchestras on both coasts and has been principal harpist with the Utah Symphony since 1987.

Wind Symphony returns from Asia

By ANNE JENSEN
Universe Staff Writer

The Wind Symphony returned from a four week tour to east Asia on Monday. The university's premier band visited major cities in the People's Republic of China, Hong Kong and the Philippines.

During the first week on tour the group performed a concert every night in different cities of Taiwan.

About every concert had an audience of about 1,000 people. But I never got tired of playing 'America's Stars and Stripes Forever' because of the effect it had on the audience," said flutist Crystal Shields.

The group's basic performance major from the University of Utah. Every one would start clapping and shouting whenever we performed. I thought it was so neat to see an American patriotic song being played to a communist audience — and they were loving it!"

Crystal Shields, a sophomore flutist, said the group's performance was a major success. "We got to exchange ideas with the audience after every concert," Shields said.

The group performed so many programs and I was able to see many of them. I was able to see many of them. I was able to see many of them.

In Hong Kong the Wind Symphony had a short exchange with the Hong Kong Symphony. The group performed at the Hong Kong Arts Center, followed by a performance there that evening. The group's ensemble presented a concert following two nights for the Hong Kong ARCO company.

shop—it was amazing—the things they offered the prices! I must have spent $300. One member of the group bought a diamond for his girl," Shields said.

When the group members didn't stay in hotels or hostels, they spent the night with local families. In Shekou, China, Shield's host family wanted to show her the real city, so they took her to visit several local "discos," or taverns.

Shields would order a 7-Up and watch the people, many of whom were native British or American citizens.

"One man started to ask questions of me, who I was, where I was from. The more he found out, the more questions he asked about BYU and the Church," she said. "Before I knew it we were having a doctrinal discussion. It felt weird to me to be almost bearing my testimony to a guy in a bar in the middle of Shekou."

The final week of the tour was spent in the Philippine Islands; first on Cebu, then Manila. Wind Symphony performed several special assemblies for students in grades four through university levels, and two informal concerts in local malls.

By the end of the tour, the ensemble was playing their own variations and arrangements of their pieces. The performers had played every piece so many times that they could improvise other sections' solos. Director David Blackinton would have just the woodwinds play instead of the whole band or the members themselves would work in a percussion solo.

"We had a lot of fun with our repertoire because we knew it so well," Shields said.

Blackinton and featured soloists Michelle Watabe and Crystal Shields were invited to appear on a daytime news-talk program, similar to Good Morning America. Watabe performed her clarinet solo during the opening credits. During the show Blackinton was interviewed by the hosts.

"When the cue came up for me to play my solo later in the show, I was sitting down because some tech had moved me out of the way," Shields said. "The host covered for me as I ran to my position."

"As I waited for them to cue me again I remembered Dr. Blackinton's words: He said that our music program stresses creativity, that BYU believes that learning can help us become like Christ. I was grateful for those words because they helped get over my nervousness and anxiety about my performance," she said.

tion program designed to provide early career recognition for outstanding young musicians in the United States.

There have been 74 winners of this competition since 1989. Many are now playing in the nation's top symphony orchestras, with professional jazz groups, or attending prestigious universities or conservatories.

Shields has soloed for BYU's Wind Symphony, the Utah Valley Symphony and was a two year member of the Utah All-State Band. She recently won the BYU concerto competition and was a member of the National Flute Association High School Honors Flute Choir. Shields is a student of Elizabeth Ruppe of Orem and is the daughter of Dennis and Helen Shields.

Jeffrey Kimpton, director of the Yamaha Young Performing Artist program, says that being a winner can be start of many future performance opportunities for aspiring young musicians.

Those in charge of the film wanted a score that was as creative and technical as the acting was, Jensen said.

Jensen said the music came through him, but not from him, adding that there was someone higher in charge.

Crystal Shields, a sophomore flutist, was selected as one of 14 winners of the Yamaha Young Performing Artists for the 1995 competition.

Shields also recently returned from an east Asian tour with BYU's Wind Symphony.

Shields auditioned for Wind Symphony, one of BYU's premier bands, partly because the group was going to tour Asia and also because of the ensemble's reputation.

There was a big deal to make the especially the freshman year," Shields said. "I'd been in my high school band and in the All-State band, but Wind Symphony was so good it was always one of my biggest goals to make it into the group."

Shields made an audition tape and had recommendations from her teachers, band directors and David Blackinton, Wind Symphony conductor and director.

'Legacy' composer feels creative fire

By SHARON SUMMERHAYS
Universe Staff Writer

There is a fire within that drives an individual. It is the creative force that is every work, said the composer of the film "Legacy."

Merrill Jensen, a Utah native, wrote the musical score to the LDS film "Legacy." He was one of the handful of artists involved with the film.

Jensen had his roots in music planted in his parents. His mother brought him opera and music of her Norwegian heritage into their home in Provo.

His father was a farmer and his talent for the trumpet. Jensen began musical training at age 10 with piano lessons. He loved classical music and the Mormon Tabernacle Choir broadcasted over the radio, he said.

Jensen came to BYU on a scholarship and studied for his trumpet performance in high school. After serving a mission for the LDS church, he returned to BYU and began work in the recording studio, picking out background music for movies and church

Jensen composed his first musical score when he was unable to find the music for a film on Native Americans. "I fell into it almost by accident," Jensen said. "I found a talented person like it."

Jensen continued composing, moving to a short church film called "First Vision." He next composed the film "The Great American Legacy," which went on to win an Academy Award.

"I felt like there was a bit of destiny in there," Jensen said, in reference to his opportunities. "I find that it is the fire within you. The creative part seizes you and becomes you. I couldn't do it if the drive was not so strong."

"You have to love that creative drive more than anything else. There's a lot of sacrifice. It may never make you a dime, but it fulfills you. The fulfillment may not be the performance, but the putting it together and finishing of it," he said.

Jensen carried that drive into composing the "Legacy" musical score.

Fruit gene could provide vaccinations

By DREW LINGINFELTER
Universe Staff Writer

Imagine eating a banana and automatically being vaccinated against polio, chicken pox or some other childhood disease. Advancements in genetic engineering could make this possible.

Dr. Charles J. Arntzen, program manager for Plant Biotechnology at the Institute of Biosciences and Technology in the Texas Medical Center in Houston, Texas, is developing the technology to produce vaccines in fruits and plants.

By developing this technology, third world countries that cannot afford expensive vaccines would be able to vaccinate entire villages just by having people eat a banana or a potato.

Ralph Andersen, a geneticist in the College of Biology, Botany and Range Science, said this is done by placing a gene into the fruit that then grows the proteins.

When people eat these proteins, the gastro-intestinal track grabs the proteins and, in turn, antibodies are produced. These antibodies are the same as those that would be produced if people were injected with a traditional vaccine, Andersen said.

What makes traditional vaccines expensive is the manufacturing process. By introducing special protein-producing genes into plants, the plant will naturally manufacture the vaccine and make the vaccine available to poor populations, Andersen said.

One banana tree could vaccinate a whole village.

"If a village has one of these banana trees, when it blooms the children will want to eat the fruit," Andersen said. "These children would automatically be vaccinated."

These fruits are still in the testing stages and they are not yet effective as traditional injections, "but they are on their way," Andersen said. "The technology is just around the corner."

Hormones could also be easily grown in plants, Anderson said.

Men's track only team invited to compete in Islamic nation of Turkey

By BRIAN WANGSGARD
Universe Sports Writer

Twenty-one members of the BYU men's track and field team departed Tuesday for an 18 day goodwill tour across the Middle Eastern nation of Turkey.

The trip, the first of its kind for the men's team in 13 years, resulted from some devoted work inside Turkey.

Assistant track coach Mark Robison's mother and father are currently serving a full-time mission for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Turkey. They are the only two official representatives of the LDS church in a nation that is 99 percent Islamic.

Robison's father is a former BYU track coach who saw track and field as a great missionary opportunity. He solicited the support of a former Turkish BYU track athlete, and the two began the process of obtaining permission for the team to compete in some track and field meets this summer.

"My father worked with the people in Turkey to get the trip approved," Robison said. "The Turkish people were very receptive and willing to let the team come and participate as representatives of the United States."

Turkey does not allow official recognition of the Church, but does permit members to assemble and follow the LDS faith if they so choose. Active proselytizing is prohibited, but the team will have opportunities to share the Christian message informally.

No firesides are scheduled, but the team will meet with members of the church and any who are interested in learning more about Christianity and LDS beliefs.

"The purpose of the trip is to provide the athletes with some competition, but more importantly to give them a chance to have a cultural and educational experience," Robison said. "It is also 'exposure' for Christians, the LDS church, and America."

The team will be participating in three track and field meets during the trip. The first meet will be a competition in Istanbul against athletes from selected universities, the second meet is the Turkish Championships held in the city of Ankara and the third meet, the trip is scheduled for the city of Izmir against open competition.

"The meet in Istanbul will be fairly easy," Robison said. "But the meets in Ankara and Izmir will be challenging because they are against the best in all of Turkey."

BYU's team will be the lone international participant at the National Championships in Ankara.

"They wanted us to come and participate in their meet," Robison said. "We will be privileged to be the only foreign team at the meet."

University dorm rooms in Istanbul, Ankara and Izmir will serve as the home for the team and coaches while they are in Turkey.

When free time is available the team will occupy themselves with some sightseeing of Turkey's museums, mosques and monuments.

"We'll take in the sights, sounds and smells," head coach Willard Robison said. "It'll be an interesting trip. The team will be returning to Turkey June 23."

Olajuwon, Shaq have mutual respect

Associated Press

Hakeem and Shaq. Grace vs. power. Experience against youth.

On one side, there's 32-year-old Hakeem Olajuwon, a 7-footer with dazzling moves, a soft touch and at the top of his game.

On the other, there's 23-year-old Shaquille O'Neal, a 7-1, 303-pound giant who is one of the most powerful forces the league has ever seen.

On Wednesday night, when Olajuwon's Houston Rockets meet O'Neal's Orlando Magic in Game 1 of the NBA Finals, the spotlight will fall on these two soft-spoken supercenters.

There's no posturing and certainly no trash talking as this series begins.

"These are two class guys," Clyde Drexler said. "It says something about Hakeem and it also says something about Shaq."

On the eve of the big game, O'Neal talked of sneaking in the back door of the HemisFair Arena in San Antonio when he was 16 to get Olajuwon's autograph.

There is no one in the league O'Neal admires more.

"He's a class act," O'Neal said. "On the court, he's a very hard-nosed player. He doesn't play dirty. He doesn't down other players. Off the court, he's well-dressed, soft-spoken, nice to people."

"So compare me to him if you're going to compare me to anybody."

Olajuwon said he's admired the way O'Neal has handled himself under the pressure of his first three highly publicized seasons in the NBA.

"I have a lot of respect for Shaq," Olajuwon said. "Just to see how he came into the league and established his position right away."

"People criticize him that he's not developing different moves but the guy led the league in scoring. To see a guy that size moving the way he does, you can't compare any player with him."

"The closest player to compare was Chocolate Thunder, Darryl Dawkins. But Shaq's stats are a lot higher, so he's in a class by himself."

Do not expect the two centers to defend each other without help, as David Robinson tried to do against Olajuwon in the San Antonio series. Olajuwon burned this season's MVP at the rate of 35.3 points and 12.5 rebounds per game.

"I marveled at the way he played," Orlando coach Brian Hill said. "In two of those games, I just got up from my sofa, and even mentioned to my team here in practice, that I've never seen a guy play better."

"He basically just put that team on his shoulders and carried them to the NBA Finals.

Of his endless array of moves, none is more deadly than the "Dreamshake," which ends with Olajuwon sinking a baseline jumper as he fades out of bounds.

"That's not a Dreamshake to us, it's a Nightmare Shake," Orlando's Anfernee Hardaway said. "Just like it's a Nightmare Shake to the whole league."

Olajuwon said O'Neal is equally unstoppable when he gets the ball close to the basket.

"There's nothing you can do," he said, "except sometimes get out of the way."

Houston's Mario Elie provided a hint of the strategy the Rockets will use to try to take advantage of Olajuwon's strengths and remove O'Neal's terrorizing defensive presence beneath the basket.

"We'll maybe try to get Hakeem outside a little bit more to take Shaq away from the basket so if guys cut there will be no shot-blocking and that leaves the boards open for a couple of offensive rebounds," Elie said.

Both coaches were asked if they'd go for a mutual pledge not to double-team either center.

"That would be interesting, wouldn't it?" Houston coach Rudy Tomjanovich said.

"There'd be a lot of mad 3-point shooters, though."

Hill said such a promise wouldn't last long.

"The first time Hakeem got the ball," he said, "I'd have to raise my hand and say, 'I lied.'"

AN EXCELLENT ACADEMIC EXPERIENCE—WHEREVER YOU ARE, WHENEVER YOU NEED US.

Kite able to keep NBA career in air

By BRIAN WANGSGARD
Universe Sports Writer

Twelve years after graduating from BYU, basketball standout Greg Kite is still living his dream of playing in the NBA -- getting some unexpected help along the way.

Kite and his wife Jennifer are the proud parents of eight adopted children, ranging in age from nine years to seven months. Last week, two of Kite's children were given permission to stay with him in Indiana and make the trip back to Orlando for games three and four of the Eastern Conference Finals.

They each wrote thank you notes to Pacers head coach Larry Brown with a post script message requesting to play their father in the next game.

And as requested by his children, Brown ended up playing Kite for an unusually large number of minutes in those two games.

"It was fun to help the kids write the thank you notes," Kite said. "I told them to write a P.S. asking coach Brown to play me and they did. I don't think it had anything to do with my playing time though."

Kite ended his 12th year on the losing team of the Eastern Conference Final, but that hasn't always been the case.

The first four and a half years of his career were spent with the Boston Celtics.

Kite was fortunate enough to earn two World Championship rings with the Celtics during the Larry Bird, Kevin McHale, Robert Parrish era.

He played with BYU teammates Danny Ainge and Fred Roberts on that Celtic squad, an experience he said was the best of his career.

"We were the three Nephites," Kite said. "We had a lot of fun and we lucky enough to be a part of a great franchise. We were in the finals all four years I was in Boston."

Superstar center Shaquille O'Neal was the first pick in the 1990 NBA Draft by the Orlando Magic.

This then placed the responsibility of tutoring the rookie squarely upon the shoulders of Kite, the Magic's starting center at the time.

"Training Shaquille didn't take much work," Kite said. "He was a complete package when he came into the league and he's getting better -- which is really scary."

Free throws are one weakness that Kite and others try to expose when playing O'Neal. However, Kite wasn't much help to Shaq on the free throw line either.

He is the unlucky owner of the second worst free throw percentage among active players in the NBA, a dubious distinction Kite is not proud of.

"I've shot around 50 percent for my career, which has been a disappointment," Kite said. "I just haven't been offensive minded, and I don't get enough attempts to shoot a high percentage from the line."

"I haven't been doing what I'm capable of doing since my college days at BYU."

Kite has a personal relationship with O'Neal that many basketball fans would be covetous of sharing.

"We get along fine," Kite said. "He is just like a kid a lot of the time. He has a great sense of humor and loves to joke around."

Challenges have surfaced during 12 years in the NBA for the 6'11 center, but the 1994-95 season was probably his toughest challenge.

First, Kite suffered his only major injury in 12 years when he tore his achilles tendon during the 1994 season, an injury that sidelined him for five months.

"It was tough for me to be out of basketball for such a long period of time," Kite said. "I had missed only four games before this injury and wasn't able to workout, so I got to be out of shape. My only goal was to get back and re-establish that I was healthy and ready to play again."

Next, Kite was released unexpectedly by the Magic despite the fact he was under contract with the team for the 1995 season.

He said he was disappointed that he was now forced to leave his family and live in hotel rooms without them.

The New York Knicks called in January 1995 and asked Kite sign with them as a back up, so he packed his bags and moved into a hotel in New York.

Kite was with the Knicks until the middle of February, but then was dealt to the Indiana Pacers.

"It has been very disruptive to be away from Orlando without my family, Kite said. "Everything was so unexpected that I couldn't move the family with me, and I missed them a lot."

Kite and his family now make their home in Orlando and plan to stay there unless an opportunity arises for them to return to the Wasatch Front.

"We like Orlando, and it's where my wife is from," Kite said. "I'm involved in some real estate and a few business things, but I'd like to move back to the Provo area if the right opportunity came up."

Kite plans to play in the NBA as long as his services are needed. He then hopes to remain involved with basketball on the coaching or management level when he retires.

This summer, Kite will be doing an internship with the league offices to see if the front office life is for him.

If not, Kite would like a shot at coaching basketball on any level, but coaching at BYU is his true desire.

"I've been keeping close tabs on BYU basketball since I left," Kite said. "It would be fun to be involved with BYU basketball once again."

P.S., Greg Kite would love a coaching job in Provo. If his children send a letter and add a post script request, maybe Kite will get his chance.

Las Vegas gets title game

Associated Press

Las Vegas scored the second payoff of its new association with the Western Athletic Conference by winning a $1 million a year bid to host the WAC's championship football game. The two-year contract to host the game adds the WAC football championship to bids already won by the city for the conference's men's and women's basketball tournaments.

Commissioner Karl Benson said the bid was the city's ability to guarantee the conference $1 million for each of the games.

DiEdwardo said the key to winning the bid was the city's ability to guarantee the conference $1 million for each of the games.

WAC officials had voiced concerns about fan support in the UNLV's 32,000-seat Sam Boyd Stadium, which was only half filled last year when the home team played in the Las Vegas Bowl.

But DiEdwardo said the game will be marketed aggressively in an effort to sell not only the permanent seats but another 9,000 temporary seats in the open end of the stadium.

Elder W. Mack Lawrence

Member of the Quorum of the Seventy

Elder Lawrence became a member of the LDS Quorum of the Seventy in 1990. Prior to his call as a General Authority, he served the Church as a Regional Representative, as a counselor in a stake presidency, as a stake high counselor, and as a bishop. Elder Lawrence currently is president of the North America Southwest Area of the Church.

At the time of his Quorum call, he had worked for more than 39 years with US West Communications and retired at the end of December 1990 as Utah vice president and chief executive officer. He holds a business degree from the University of Utah.

In addition to his distinguished business career, Elder Lawrence has been involved in a wide variety of community services. Currently he is on the board of directors of the Pioneer Theatre Company and Westminster College; the executive committee and board of directors of the Economic Development Corporation of Utah; and the Board of Business and Economic Development of Utah. Most recently, he chaired the building fund campaign for the newly completed Primary Children's Medical Center. He has also chaired the Salt Lake Area Chamber of Commerce and has been president of the Salt Lake Rotary Club.

Dear Larry:
I knew the $2005 I paid for my 63pt HVS2 diamond & wedding ring was a very low price. You suggested the retail jewelry store would charge $4200 for the same diamonds and rings, but settle for $3800. One of my friends bought a very similar stone and sure enough the retailer asked $4200, and settled for $3600. Thanks for helping me save $1595.

Republicans swimming in a pool of 'soft money'

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — From Fruit of the Loom to the NRA, contributors have given $7.3 million in "soft money" to the Republican National Committee in the first four months of 1995.

That's close to the $10.5 million in soft money the party raised for all of 1993, when it encountered leaner fund-raising times after President Clinton took office.

Emboldened by its recent takeover of Congress, the GOP is again raking in five- and six-figure donations from corporate America.

"I've been rich, and I've been poor, and I like being rich better," party chairman Haley Barbour said. "This is like getting a drink of water from a fire hydrant, but I haven't drowned yet."

Corporations are legally forbidden from donating to federal candidates, and campaign finance laws passed after Watergate limit the size of donations that individuals can give as well.

But a provision — critics call it a loophole — in those laws allows both political parties to collect millions a year in unlimited contributions from wealthy individuals and companies.

Such donations, which often exceed $100,000, are supposed to be used for general party-building activities and not to directly advocate any federal candidate's election.

But they play an important role in presidential elections, funding get-out-the-vote drives, generic party advertisements and the like.

OP begins hearings to reinvent taxes

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — With an eye on 1996 elections, House members began laying the legislative and political groundwork for radical change in the tax system.

During a week of hearings, the chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Bill Archer, said the 82-year-old income tax "must be replaced."

More than 40 reform advocates testified this week, the first out of the gate were executives of businesses large and small.

James G. Dakin, senior tax counsel for Mobil Corp., stacked his commensurate-volume, 6,300-page, 76-tax return atop the witness stand, balancing the precarious pile as he and still cameras recorded the hearing. The company, which paid more in federal taxes last year, spent $10 million and "57 man-years" just to produce the return, he said.

Archer, R-Texas, would replace the income tax with a broad-based tax on individual and business consumption spending, with exemptions for med-

Chairman of the tax-writing Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Bill Archer, declared the 82-year-old income tax "too broken to be fixed" and said, "It must be replaced."

ical and some housing expenses.

And then, "to make doubly sure the income tax won't rise from the dead to ever again haunt the American people," he said, he would repeal the 16th Amendment that authorized taxation of income.

He hasn't settled on the details of his alternative, but is considering a national sales tax, possibly in combination with some form of value-added tax, which is similar to a sales tax but is levied at all levels of production.

Archer and other income-tax opponents concede a complete overhaul of the tax system probably must wait until after the election.

Congress this year is contemplating a package of tax cuts that would leave the current system largely in place.

Whatever reform ultimately is adopted, he said, should meet four objectives: eliminate individual tax returns, encourage savings, catch tax cheaters and promote U.S. exports.

The chief rival of his approach is the flat-rate income tax championed by House Majority Leader Dick Armey, R-Texas.

For individuals, all earned income above basic exemptions for adults and children would be taxed at the same rate. Deductions and credits would be eliminated.

Project Vision helps youth set goals

ALLYSON SHROCK
Universe Staff Writer

Program called Project Vision is looking for volunteers to help with ages 12 to 17 build greater self-esteem and integrate into the community more easily.

Project Vision, which started with Community Action, takes low-income at-risk young adults and pairs them with volunteers from the community. The program helps build a self-image while helping them see how the government and community function.

Curtis, director of Project Vision, said they wanted to do something to help youth. Most young people in the program come from single-parent homes and need someone to talk to with them, he said.

Olvera, a BYU student from Provo, Ore., who volunteers for Project Vision, said it has given him a sense of how he can be an asset in the community.

"I want to get into the root of the problems and help solve them," said Olvera. "Not just focus on the surface things."

The first month of the program will be facilitated by Curtis, he said. It will focus on setting goals and other self-improvement topics. After that initial month, the youth and volunteers will take over, presenting topics that are of interest to the community.

Curtis said the culminating event will be a service project. The youth will be responsible for finding a need within the community and planning and organizing the project with the help of volunteers.

"It will be a lot of fun because we get to get out with the kids one-on-one, helping them with any concerns and problems they have in their life," Olvera said.

Olvera said there are many social problems in the world. Kids of the future need to get help now. He said he will continue as a volunteer for as long as he can.

Volunteers must be 18 years or older and be willing to dedicate three hours a week for six months. All volunteers must have a background check and go through a four-hour training class.

Behavior problems will depend on the youth, said Curtis. However, each volunteer will be able to meet the person before they start and have the chance to decide whether to continue with him or her.

Project Vision wants to pair up volunteers with youth who have similar interests and with whom they can get along. It is a wonderful opportunity to get involved with the community and to gain experience, Curtis said. Many of the volunteers are studying education or similar fields.

Olvera said he is really excited to get involved because the focus of Project Vision is to turn the youth into future volunteers when they are finished with the program.

Those interested can contact Curtis at 373-8200.

BURNING THE STARS AND STRIPES: Robert L. Smith of American Legion Post 176 burns one of approximately 100 faded or unused flags which were destroyed on Flag Day in 1990 in Huntsville, Ala. Some say banning the desecration of the American flag is unnecessary because Americans already respect the symbol as representative of their freedom.

Clinton comes out against banning flag desecration

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Clinton administration came out against a constitutional amendment banning desecration of the flag Tuesday, saying it would be wrong to alter the Bill of Rights over an act that rarely occurs.

The Bill of Rights has not been amended since it was ratified in 1792, Assistant Attorney General Walter Dellinger told a Senate Judiciary Committee panel. There's no justification for doing it now "in the absence of any meaningful evidence that the flag is in danger of losing its symbolic value."

Republicans, with some Democratic backing, are seeking a constitutional amendment that would give Congress and the states power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag.

The effort is in response to a 1989 Supreme Court ruling that struck down state laws on flag desecration on the grounds they violated Americans' First Amendment rights to free expression.

Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, said the Supreme Court decision "has given us no choice. If we believe the flag is important enough to protect from physical desecration, an amendment is necessary."

"This is an effort originating entirely among the American people, over 75 percent of whom both favor protecting the flag and sensibly believe that freedom of speech is not jeopardized by so doing," the senator said.

Hatch said the amendment would not endanger free speech because it "relates only to the flag. The uniqueness of the flag renders the amendment no precedent for any other amendment or legislation."

Dellinger said that while President Clinton, as governor of Arkansas, backed anti-desecration legislation and opposed the Supreme Court ruling, he did not believe it was right to tamper with the Constitution over the issue.

The amendment, Dellinger said, would open the way to serious disputes over the intent and content of desecration and the meaning of "flag," such as whether flags shown on clothing, posters or buttons also would be protected by law.

Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., noted that there have been an average of only about eight flag-burning incidents a year since the Supreme Court decision.

But William Detweiler, national commander of the American Legion, said the number of incidents was irrelevant. "If burning the flag is wrong, it is wrong no matter how many times it occurs. In fact, we contend it is a problem even if no one ever burns another flag."

Spelunking popular with students

By MATTHEW WRIGHT

Universe Staff Writer

Spelunking local caves is a popular summer pastime for students.

Perhaps the most well known and most developed cave in Utah is Timpanogos Cave National Monument in American Fork Canyon, about 30 minutes from Provo, said Helen Carson of the Timpanogos Cave Visitor's Center.

The cave site contains three separate caves connected by an electrically lighted walkway. The first was discovered in 1887, and the other two were found in 1922.

The paved trail to the cave mouth is 1.5 miles up the mountain side. The hike takes about three hours.

The cave maintains a temperature of 45 degrees, so a jacket or sweater is recommended.

Tours run from May 26 to Sept. 4 from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m. Tickets can be purchased over the phone up to one month in advance. It is best to order tickets ahead of time, as daily tickets sell out by mid-morning, said Roy Cordell, superintendent of the park, in a press release.

Nutty Putty Cave, located somewhere west of Utah Lake, is an amusement park of niches and crannies in the dark. It is less established than Timpanogos, although tours are available.

The exact location of the entrance to the cave is not officially published, but people still manage to find their way there.

BYU Outdoors Unlimited has an agreement with the owner of the caves not to publish the location. In exchange, the owner allows them to lead guided tours through the cave, said Randy Blue, a junior majoring in health science from Rock Hill, S.C. who works at the store.

Tours of the cave by Outdoors Unlimited cost $9 plus tax per person and includes transportation, insurance, guides and require the use of a helmet. Cave visitors are told to bring two independent sources of light, a sack lunch and a camera.

Timpanogos Grotto is an organization of avid spelunkers. The group provides serious cavers the opportunity to go on trips with fellow devotees of the sport. It is a policy with the group not to divulge the locations of local caving sites to anyone who isn't a member, said Dan Clyde, a senior majoring in musical dance theater from Concord, Mass., and president-elect of the organization.

"Most of the caves in this area are vertical and require skill with ropes and rock climbing," he said. "It would be very dangerous for someone who doesn't know what they are doing, and it could also damage the cave."

The Grotto meets each month on the first Thursday at the Lehi Public Library. They go on trips to local caves and provide training in the art of spelunking. Anyone who is seriously interested in becoming a spelunker is invited. There is a $10 yearly membership fee.

Taking exam allows students to do taxes for others

By ELIZABETH BINGHAM

Universe Staff Writer

Students who have prepared tax returns for others and wish to represent them before the IRS should take an enrolled agent exam, according to an IRS-issued press release.

Enrolled agents are given the same privileges at the IRS as certified public accountants and attorneys.

"The difference is that the enrolled agent is certified by the IRS, whereas the others are certified by the state," Harding said.

For many, obtaining enrolled agent status is one step taken before becoming a certified public accountant, Harding said. Most of the students who take the exam are either in accounting or law and have prepared tax returns for a while.

Applications for this exam, to be taken in September, are now available by calling (801)-524-5297.

In addition to the enrolled agent exam, the IRS recently gave three other hints.

• Students who are self-employed, receive income from trust funds or receive money from selling stocks should estimate the amount of taxes they will pay by June 15, Harding said. This will cover the first four months of the 1995 tax year.

However, students who have a small portion of their paychecks withheld for taxes do not need to be concerned, Harding said.

• If people have forgotten to report income or deductions in their 1994 tax returns, mistakes can be amended using a 1040X form, according to the press release.

• Also, if students must move at least 50 miles for employment purposes, their moving expenses may be tax deductible, the press release reported.

However, if students are reimbursed by their new employer, they claim these costs.

For further tax questions and for call 1-800-TAX-FORM.
